PRIVACY POLICY

Prelude & Explanatory Notes on the “Privacy Policy”

Visitors to this website are kindly requested to first consider the following information and explanatory notes before recognizing and evaluating the legal definitions, stipulations, and requirements, outlined further below (refer to “legal document”):

Your connection to this website via the internet

Whenever you connect to this website, you will be visiting the server at the following IP address:

91.232.125.28

with the trusted provider “The Hosting Heroes Ltd.”

Please note that due to the idiosyncracies of cloud technology implemented in modern data centers, and depending on the location an IP address check is executed from, an IP address check may intermittently display a different IP address, or a different location associated with the stated IP address.

Whenever you connect to the server to visit this website, this connection is made securely by using an encryption protocol known as “SSL” (Secure Sockets Layer) validated by a “SSL certificate”. This encryption is designed to make sure no one else has access to the data transferred between your computer and the server, in either direction.

The encryption is recognizable by a “padlock symbol” in your browser’s web address field, and by the URL spelled “https://...” (rather than “http”). “HTTPS” means “HyperText Transfer Protocol – Secure”.

As a general rule, it is not safe to visit websites without this security feature. Your connection might be hijacked and re-routed to another server, or the website you are accessing might have been hacked. Avoid typing in any information in the form fields found on websites that have an insecure connection!

As a preemptive security precaution, your browser may warn you about an “insecure connection” in advance. In many cases this browser warning may arise from completely innocent content integration methods – for example the integration of a so-called “hot-linked image” (an image not stored and made available on the server that is hosting the website, but “pulled” from a third-party server not covered by the same SSL-certificate).

Your personal data

The Website Operator does not intend to harvest, re-use, sell, or otherwise make use of your personal data or other identifying information outside the scope of the Site in any way.

The Website Operator works with certain partners and services, who collect and evaluate the publicly viewable information you make available whenever connecting to the internet, as captured by your browser and made readable to the server you are connecting to, when clicking a link or typing in a web address (URL).

Basic anonymized website analytics services make use of this publicly viewable and accessible information. This includes the pages you visited, your IP address, the location associated with your IP address, the timing and duration of your visit, your device type and operating system, as well as any download operations you performed.

This publicly viewable and accessible information is:

Your IP address, i.e. an address identifying your internet provider which is specific to you. Think of your IP address like the license plate on your car: it is not feasible to drive on the road network without one, all the while every other motorist or even bystander can read it.

Your IP address can be obfuscated, by replacement with another IP address “on the fly”, using a so-called VPN service (Virtual Private Network) you may wish to activate.

Some networks (wireless WiFi or wired LAN) provide so-called dynamic IP addresses, which means your actual IP address is changed or rotated on a regular basis.

Your computer’s operating system, and device identifier.

Nowadays it is standard practice for both a device identifier and the operating system used on that device to be disclosed online, whenever that device connects to the internet.

This information can therefore also be read by website analytics services.

Cookies which have been set in your browser’s cookie depository by the partners and services used by the Website Operator, during the current and any previous visits to this website (and which you have not yet deleted).

Partners and services used do not investigate what other websites you have visited. This would be possible by parsing the cookies set by those other websites in your browser (cookies which you have not yet deleted), and which can provide certain information specific to you – information that would otherwise remain inaccessible, incoherent, or incomplete.

Specifically, partners and services used do not register, evaluate, access, or make use of so-called “Third Party Cookies” which you may have allowed to be stored in your browser, and which can be read by the cookies set by other websites you visit after that. Cookies are text files, and different websites may read information captured and stored in these text files while you visited other websites.

For example, the website Amazon.com may leave a Third Party Cookie in your browser, telling the world you have been looking for women's lingerie on Amazon (the keyword "lingerie" you typed into the Amazon search bar is also written into a Third Party Cookie). You might then access the website of your local newspaper and see ads for lingerie displayed in that website's sidebar. This would be because you agreed to the newspaper website setting "all" cookies, making your information fair game for any third party data scrapers which your local newspaper may cooperate with – who will read the contents of the Third Party Cookie previously set by Amazon. Some of the cookies set by these third party data scrapers actually facilitate reading every keyboard stroke while they are active, and as a result seem to always "know what is on your mind".

Your browser, such as e.g. Google Chrome, Edge, or Firefox. Modern web browsers provide users with extensive opportunities to protect themselves against being tracked on the internet. These mechanisms need to be studied and understood by the web user, and the web user must adjust the manual settings in their browser for these mechanisms to be effective. For example, you have the option of deleting all cookies automatically whenever you close your browser or shut off your computer.

Also, you can manually delete all cookies currently present in your browser before accessing a new website. For example, if you just visited the website of a credit rating agency and looked up your information there, you may wish to delete the cookies set by that website before accessing your online banking.

Where you click, and which pages you visit, also, which media you view or which PDF documents you download. Partners and services used do track every URL (website address, link) on the Site which you as a Visitor access or click on.

Partners and services used do access, capture, store, and evaluate this data you as a Visitor provide publicly whenever you connect to the internet and access the Site.

The Website Operator also gains information on the origin of access to this website, for example, from which country, city, or metropolitan area your internet provider is connecting you to the Site.

This data is used only in an anonymized manner (your name and the physical home address associated with your IP address are not publicly viewable and hence are never registered). Only law enforcement agencies would be entitled to research your physical address, based on a registered IP address. You would need to be informed about such an information request by your provider.

Such use of publicly viewable user data is concurrent with generally established practices among the vast majority of other websites you might be visiting on a daily basis.

The purpose of such use is to allow the Website Operator to optimize and adapt the Site in a manner most suitable to meet the needs of all website users, including yours as a Visitor.

The publicly viewable and accessible information may be read and processed by one or more of these partners and services:

Matomo Analytics

Yandex Metrika Analytics

Google Analytics ("GA4"), coupled with Google Search Console ("GSC")

Why is it called a "Privacy Policy"?

Indeed, this term – having come into use over the years – is a bit misleading. In essence, the Privacy Policy explains how much privacy you are surrendering by visiting a website.

Similar rules about how your data can be used, how you can request access to stored data, and how you may ask for this data to be deleted (so-called "right to be forgotten") are in effect in various jurisdictions.

In Europe, the term "Data Protection Policy" is often used. It arises from the underlying legal framework, known as "GDPR" (General Data Protection Regulation).

GDPR legal initiatives were first fielded by European authorities. US state law was then modeled in a similar fashion, such as now applicable in California, and other states.

For the Website Operator, having a Privacy Policy, or Data Protection Policy in place is not only a legal but also a reputational, and likewise a business requirement. For example, it is impossible to integrate a payment gateway into an e-commerce website without such a policy being made available.

The purpose of so-called "Data Protection" legislation

When you dig into the issue a bit deeper you may realize that the underlying purpose of many a published privacy policy document, as well as the legislation this is based on, often seems to not actually protect your data. Instead, one gets the distinct impression an attempt is made to legalize harvesting and use of such data in ways most web users cannot possibly fathom or comprehend – by actively soliciting the users' consent, without enabling them to make an informed decision.

Lawmakers (their back office staff) have spent endless hours and parliamentary sessions working out the details of "data protection" and "cookie legislation", so as to retain the appearance of protecting their constituents' personal data, and so as to be able to claim plausible deniability in case your data is used in ways you may not like, by some service which has read a Third Party Cookie ... that has read another Third Party Cookie, set by another Third Party Cookie in your web browser's depository.

Different types of "cookies"

The relevant data protection, or "cookie" legislation categorizes cookies according to their function, and purpose. One such category is known as "functional", "technical", "necessary", or "essential" cookies. By law, the placement of these specific cookies (only) does not require the web user's consent, given that this type of cookie is deemed to be essential for the proper functioning of any given website.

Recent amendments to GDPR legislation have now stipulated that any permission granted by web users for placement of “non-essential” cookies in their browser must proceed on an “Opt-In” basis (meaning the opted-out state is default).

This means that by law, whenever the user first visits a website, by default no permissions are granted unless the user proactively grants such permission afterwards by clicking a button labeled “Agree”, or “Confirm”, or sliding a switch to “On”.

This is in contrast to the previously prevalent mode of “Opt Out” (meaning by default you opted in automatically just by accessing the website): all cookies were set as soon as the website loaded, to be deleted or deactivated by the user actively requesting this cancellation in the subsequent cookie consent flow. The wholesale placement of cookies during initial loading of the website in the user’s browser window already allowed for harvesting of certain information from any Third Party Cookies present there – even before such activity could be interdicted by the user opting out. Certain legislators wised up to this and proposed amendments to GDPR legislation accordingly.

However, cookies in the category known as “functional”, “technical”, “necessary”, or “essential”, as required for proper functioning of the visited website, do not require any consent from the user under GDPR rules, and are “opted in” automatically as a result of accessing the website. Opting out from such essential cookies is not technically feasible.

Some implementations of cookie consent now require the user to manually activate cookies depending on the category, or even the individual supplier, of such cookies. This tends to create a rather cumbersome user experience. The Website Operator has decided to avoid such elaborate solutions for this Site. Their implementation is simply not necessary, and would represent what might be called “legal overkill”, while usurping the Visitor’s time.

Applicable jurisdiction of a privacy policy document

Please bear in mind that the stipulated wording of a privacy policy arises from certain legal requirements applicable to a specific jurisdiction.

Things get complicated when a business is located in one place, their website is on a server in a completely different jurisdiction, and the user is accessing the website from a place (which might not even be the user’s home), possibly from another continent.

Given the Site addresses a global audience, this “Privacy Policy” cannot possibly accommodate the requirements of any and all jurisdictions in equal measure. Contrary to common perception, GDPR is not a “global law”. There is no such thing as a globally applicable law, given there is no global jurisdiction.

It is generally accepted that the privacy policy of a website must comply with the local jurisdiction applicable to the registered seat of the website publisher.

But the internet reaches across borders. Being subjected to the local jurisdiction of a given website publisher is of little use to website visitors from all over the world.

The Website Operator therefore aims to streamline this privacy policy document, so as to enable a sensible level of compliance with basic requirements stipulated by law in multiple jurisdictions.

The Website Operator selects partners and services used very carefully.

The Website Operator categorically refuses to allow third-party services, operating internationally, and spread across various jurisdictional environments, to leverage the Site for the benefit of their commercialized data-harvesting schemes. Such schemes generally offer no benefit either to users, nor for the management of the Site.

Types of cookies which may be placed when visiting this website:

“Functional” (a.k.a. “technical”, “essential”, “necessary”) cookies

On this website, the Website Operator, within the framework of the website installation, does not set any cookies in your browser which do not meet the description of being “functional”, “technical”, “necessary”, or “essential cookies”.

A CMS (Content Management System) used will place certain temporary session cookies in your browser. Additionally, the theme used for presenting this website may place such temporary cookies in your browser.

Functions related to member sign-up & login, or client registration & login will place temporary session cookies in your browser, which store your login user name (e-mail address) and password in an encrypted manner. Please make sure you have noted down or remembered your password before logging out and/or deleting these cookies, as this would cause the saved data to no longer be accessible.

Cookies set by partners and services used

The partners and services used by the Website Operator will, after your proactive “Opt-In”, place certain additional cookies in your browser, allowing them to capture additional anonymized information about your website visit.

These cookies may not match the description of “functional”, “technical”, “necessary”, or “essential cookies”.

Cookies set by websites linked from this website, based on referrals

It is common practice for a Website Operator to link to other websites within the context of a referral to another business. The underlying advertising concept is known as “Affiliate Marketing”. As such, the Website Operator and/or any posting authors are an “affiliate”, or “referral partner”, of the business you are being referred to when clicking a link embedded on this website that takes you to the third-party website of that business.

The website you are reaching after clicking such an "Affiliate Link" will set a cookie in your browser, identifying you as a client prospect, and identifying the Website Operator as the affiliate having made the associated referral.

You will not pay higher prices because you reached that business through such an "Affiliate link", compared to what you would otherwise pay if you had accessed that website through the Google search engine - or by simply typing their website URL into your browser address field. However, you may be eligible for current or future special offers because you used that specific "Affiliate link" to onboard with the referred business.

Please do not delete any cookies set by referred businesses before you have completed their client onboarding process, as otherwise you may deprive yourself of such potential benefits.

Cookie placement outside of the Website Operator's control

Cookies set by social media platforms

Clicking certain social media links placed on this website will trigger placement of a cookie by that social media platform. Depending on whether you are already logged into that social media platform, other cookies may be set in succession.

This also applies in case you are using Google or Facebook as a "SSO" (Single Sign-On) provider, namely for purposes of authentication via the use of services, websites, or platforms where you are already logged in. The Website Operator has no control over the cookies set by such social media platforms, neither over their interaction amongst each other, nor with cookies set by this website.

Given you choose to interact with that specific linked social media platform, the privacy policy published by that social media platform applies exclusively, in all cases.

This also applies when you view media embedded on this website, such as videos hosted on the YouTube, or Rumble platforms. The embedding on this website happens in a so-called "iframe", which is a method of building a "window" from one website to a specific section on another website.

It is generally advisable to only log in to any social media platform when you actually intend to use it at that time, and to make sure you are not visiting any other website or using another service at the same time.

For example, when viewing a YouTube video embedded in an iframe on this website, whether you are simultaneously logged into your Google account will affect what Google (the owner of YouTube) can glean from this interaction. This is because you are in fact accessing the YouTube website through the iframe embedded on this website.

As a general rule it is a sensible precaution to log out from one service or website before logging in to any other, and to abstain from using "SSO" (Single Sign-On) solutions which may log you into multiple services or platforms simultaneously. This would deprive you of any specific control over the processing of your data as it is being exchanged between these multiple services or platforms.

Cookies set by payment service providers

A payment gateway (for example PayPal or a credit card checkout) connected to this website would store data in cookies inside your browser, in an encrypted manner designed to be otherwise inaccessible.

It is important to understand that when entering the data for payment you are in fact accessing the website of that payment gateway, and have left this website for this specific process.

The payment gateway may be embedded on this website using a technology called "iframe" which might be explained as being a window from one website to another.

Alternatively, the payment gateway may open on a separate page hosted on that payment provider's own website. This separate page might be placed in an overlay, also known as a "modal".

These methods are used for security reasons and to ensure compliance with pertinent PSD2 directives in effect. These directives regulate transmission of financial data over the internet.

Given you choose to interact (enter billing details, payment methods, and make a payment) using that specific payment gateway, the privacy policy published by that payment gateway will apply, exclusively, in all cases.

Your personal data you type into form fields on this website

When visiting this website, you may be entering data into form fields. This data is transferred via an encrypted connection, and designed to be stored in encrypted form.

Your data will be retained in the databases on the servers of this website only for purposes you initially entered that data. For example, you might be providing your e-mail address for purposes of sign-up or registration, and for subsequent logging in to your profile page.

Your data will not be used for any purpose other than why you entered it into a form field on this website at the time. So if you provided a specific e-mail address as a login user name, the Website Operator will not use that e-mail address for any e-mail communication outside of the scope of the account you registered for. This applies unless you grant the Website Operator specific permission to do so, for example, by providing "marketing consent" or subscribing to the "newsletter".

The Website Operator will not share, proliferate, or even sell your data to any third parties. Law enforcement authorities may request handover of your personal data. The Website Operator will comply with such a request only on the basis of a warrant or court order.

Your data will be deleted upon your request, for example when you decide to cancel a membership or client account on this website. Even if you never delete your data, the Website Operator will not use this data for any other purpose as originally provided for.

As a precaution, the Website Operator may delete dormant user accounts after a certain grace period. This would entail the deletion of any data you may have provided.

Your e-mail address

Your e-mail address will be stored in the associated systems when you register and log in to your membership or client account on this website.

The Website Operator will use your e-mail address in the associated systems only to enable and provide the services you request, and may for this purpose send – possibly automated – messages related to your membership or client account on this website.

Please bear in mind that hackers may try to access your membership or client account. If hackers already know your e-mail address they will have already taken the first hurdle in such a hacking attempt. Therefore, please consider carefully which e-mail address you choose to use as a login or user name, and for your user profile on this website. It is advisable to use an e-mail address for such purposes which differs from the one you use for general communication, or other reasons.

Your password

The password you set when registering a membership or client account on this website is the most important safeguard against unauthorized access to your account.

Please be aware that passwords are generally stored in encrypted form. Neither the Website Operator, nor others, can read your password in plain language. The Website Operator cannot retrieve your password, if lost or forgotten. The only option then is for you to “reset” (replace, renew) your password, via a link sent to the e-mail address you originally provided at the time you set the now lost or forgotten password.

If you also lost access to that e-mail account (a situation entirely outside the scope of this website’s operations) the Website Operator may only reinstate your membership or client account after validating your personal information by other means (involving courier mail and the supply of certified/notarized copies of government-issued identity documents).

Many web users create user registrations in a hurry, and often use the same password across many or even all registrations they execute on various websites and platforms. In fact, many users actually use the phrase “password” as a password. Such haphazard practices are highly inadvisable, making life all too easy for hackers.

Advice on choosing a secure password:

A password should never match a letter sequence found in any word that is spelled out in any dictionary. A good policy is to choose a unique password you easily remember by heart. You may wish to delete all vowels, or all consonants (as you choose) from the original spelling of this unique password. Furthermore, you could divide this password into syllables, with one syllable to be all capitals, the other being all lower case. This would satisfy the ubiquitous password setting requirement of having both upper and lower case letters included in your password. Furthermore, you should add or intersperse a number or figure you can remember easily into your password spelling.

Advice on entering your password into form fields:

The most secure password is of no use in protecting your account when it is read by keyboard loggers operating clandestinely on your computer, as you type it into a form field on a website.

A keyboard logger is software stored on your computer, sometimes even with your unwitting consent, which logs, stores and/or transmits online any keystroke sequence you type.

Some keyboard loggers only activate when a form field on a website is highlighted (cursor placed inside the password entry field).

Apart from running an effective anti-virus and web security software on your device, one strategy to render many keyboard loggers ineffective is to copy your password from a text file (Notepad .txt) stored on e.g. a USB stick, and paste it into the password field on the website you are accessing. The keyboard logger software operating on your system might then capture the keystrokes [CTRL + C] + [CTRL + V] (mouse commands, right-click "Copy" + "Paste") - but not the exact spelling of your password. Using this copy/paste method is also much more simple and reliable than manual typing.

Your telephone number

You may be given the option to provide a mobile/cell phone telephone number to receive a SMS text message for purposes of 2FA (Two Factor Authorization) account security.

The Website Operator will not store or make use of this telephone number for any purpose other than enabling your 2FA-secured login to your membership or client account on this website.

For example, you cannot expect a callback to your mobile/cell phone number for purposes of providing general customer service, if you have not provided that number through other channels.

Personal data you submit with any communication sent to the Website Operator

When you communicate with the Website Operator, for example by making use of the contact details spelled out on this website, be it by e-mail, phone, or even by post, the Website Operator will inadvertently be provided with your personal data as a result. Such communication takes place outside of the scope of the Site, namely, externally from this website installation, separate from this website's server and databases, and is therefore outside the scope of any applicable privacy policy requirements.

When you communicate with the Website Operator, by telephone, e-mail, or by letter, you provide your personal data to the Website Operator on your own volition. The Website Operator will not be responsible for the further use, proliferation, or even misuse of this personal data you provide to the Website Operator, at that time or in the future. The Website Operator cannot be expected to keep track of this data, or provide proof of such data being stored in a certain way, or of it having been deleted.

You accept these conditions when engaging in communication with the Website Operator outside the scope of this website installation and therefore outside the applicability of any privacy policy requirements.

“Personally Identifiable Information”

refers to any information that identifies or can be used to identify, contact, or locate the person to whom such information pertains, including, but not limited to, name, address, phone number, fax number, email address, financial profiles, social security number or similar identifying information, and credit card information.

Personally Identifiable Information does not include information that is collected anonymously (that is, without identification of the individual Visitor) or demographic information not connected to an identified individual, hereinafter collectively referred to as “Anonymous Data”.

Anonymous Data collected to identify a specific Visitor without reference or knowledge of name:

The Website Operator may collect basic user profile information from all of the website’s Visitors, anonymously:

- IP address
- Operating system you use
- Device identifiers, e.g. “Open Device Identification Number”
- Type and version of your browser
- The timing and duration of your visit
- Location your internet provider connects from
- The pages you visit
- Any links you click
- Any media or content you download

Anonymous Data is used for the following purposes:

Log Files: As is true of most websites, the Website Operator gathers certain information automatically and stores it in log files. This information includes IP addresses, browser type, Internet service provider (ISP), referring/exit pages, operating system, date/time stamp, and clickstream data. The Website Operator uses this information to maintain and improve the performance of the Site and the Services.

Analytics: The Website Operator uses analytics services such as Google Analytics, Yandex Metrika, and Matomo to help analyze how Visitors use the Site. Analytics services use “Cookies” to collect information, such as how often the Visitors visit the Site and the Website Operator uses the information to improve the Site and the Services. The analytics services' ability to use and share information collected by them is restricted by their terms of use and privacy policy, which you should refer to for more information about how these entities use this information.

Location Information: If you have enabled location services on your mobile device, the Website Operator may collect your location information to improve the Services offered. If you do not want this information collected, you can restrict or disable location services on your device.

Cookies: “Cookies” are small pieces of information (text files) that a website sends to your computer’s hard drive while you are viewing the website. These text files can be used by websites to make the user experience more efficient. Both session Cookies (which expire once you close your web browser) and persistent Cookies (which stay on your computer until you delete them) may be used, to provide you with a more personal and interactive experience of the Services and to market the Services or other products. The law states that the Website Operator can store these cookies on your device without your express consent if they are strictly "necessary", "functional", "technical", or "essential" for the operation of this Site. For making use of all other types of cookies the Website Operator needs your permission which you grant by opting in to the activation of the relevant scripts making use thereof.
